4. Skills to be gained / general learning objectives

Objectives for the course: International trade

At the end of this class, students will have a basic understanding of how international trade works.

Learning objectives:

- Understand how trade affects different types of workers and why.
- Demonstrate an understanding of the functions of the WTO and the main principles
- Discuss the pros and cons of different trade policies

Objectives for the course: International relations

The course intends to give a general overview of international relations (IR) through the lenses of political economy, with a specific focus of international trade, direct investment and finance.

The course will also investigate how domestic institutions and civil societies influence international economic policy choices and the role of multilateral diplomacy (in particular Bretton-Woods institutions such as the World Trade Organization, the World Bank Group, the 8 /International Monetary Fund, and the G7-8 / OECD).

Furthermore, some attention will be devoted to a number of key contemporary issues in international affairs such as globalisation versus neo-protectionism, regionalism versus nationalism, domestic versus international standards (goods & services, environment, labour etc.). The course will shed light on, how corporate organisations are impacted by events such as the 2008 financial crisis, changes in global supply chains, global power shifts and the emergence of emerging and frontier markets as global economic power.

Objectives for the course: International organizations

This course aims at providing students with a general understanding of international organizations, both governmental and non-governmental, working in the realms of peace and security, health, humanitarian action and IHL. As such, while strongly anchored in current affairs, it will focus mainly, based on historical and theoretical elements, on the United Nations System, and humanitarian NGOs. More specifically, the discussion and case studies will deal with the challenges, the successes and the historical path of these organizations, discussing notably how – and if they have been able to – they have evolved. The course will also address the questions of why would states want to join an international organization and that of the power of non-governmental organizations. Other international organizations, such as the WEF or the CERN will be discussed as seen fit.

5. Teaching and content

Course: International relations

This is an introductory course in the study of international relations. The goal of this course is to acquaint you with the concepts, ideas, and analytical tools necessary to understand state behavior and relationships among actors in the international system with a specific focus of international political economics, trade, and finance. The course will also investigate how domestic institutions and civil societies influence international economic policy choices and the role of multilateral diplomacy (in particular Bretton-Woods institutions such as the World Trade Organization, the World Bank Group, the International Monetary Fund, and the G7-8 / OECD).

Furthermore, focused attention will be devoted to a number of key contemporary issues in international affairs such as globalisation versus neo-protectionism, regionalism versus nationalism, domestic versus international standards (goods & services, environment, labour etc.), Feminism and social (in) justice etc. The course will shed light on, how corporate organisations are impacted by events such as the 2008 financial crisis, changes in global supply chains, global power shifts and the emergence of emerging and frontier markets as global economic power
